Merge CSV and Text app description With Merge CSV and Text, we have designed a very easy and intuitive application to merge column information, from one or more CSV and/or TXT formatted files, into one, much like mail merge. After selecting the input files, a simple configuration should make it easy for users to let the app know what to do with the given files, in terms of inputting and outputting the processed data. Those without experience of data merging or mail merge operations, could have difficulty figuring out what to do with the given information, particularly in the case of column merging operations, such as the one in mail merge processing. The application should provide users with a simple solution for easily merging the column text data from such file formats. Simple file input-output configuration, which will require several prerequisites for the added files The application accepts file inputs only manually, either by adding the file address in the input field or by navigating to it, using the included directory selector. There is no support for drag-and-drop operations, which could impede the workflow of those who are accustomed to such functionality. However, adding the files and selecting an output location is simple enough, all things considered. However, what users must consider is that the columns of both the CSV and TXT files need to match exactly, as there is no way of selecting the data from within the app. Lack of file header or column preview could bother more demanding users If users are not sure of the formatting of the inputted data, especially regarding the spreadsheet information contained in the CSV file, they need to open the files in their respective, proprietary apps, as Merge CSV and Text offers no preview of the loaded data. A short preview of the loaded data, especially the headers or first rows of the columns, could have been useful in letting users know if everything is in order with the loaded information. Ingenious solution for merging tabular data column information, from Excel and text formats, much like mail merge Give this application a try if you seek an easy method of merging CSV and TXT column data without having to go through complex procedures.
