Pelvic Fracture: Elastic Struts or Metallic Stents? Pelvic fractures are highly disabling and the combined morbidity and mortality increase with time. Restoration of blood supply to the traumatized tissues is the key aspect of the treatment. Stent-assisted coiling has proved to be an effective option. However, its broader application remains challenging because of associated vascular, infectious and ischemic complications. Other treatments such as application of external fixators and clinical salvage have been proven. This study compares short- and long-term outcomes in patients treated with elastic stents or metallic stents (single stent, multiple stents and temporary stenting). The outcome of 272 consecutive patients with pelvic fracture treated with either metal stents or elastic stents between February 2005 and November 2015 was retrospectively reviewed. Clinical follow-up was possible in 239 patients. Thirty-day mortality was 23.8% in the stent group and 26.4% in the conventional coiling group. No statistically significant difference in mortality was found. External fixators were applied in 22.3% of the patients due to recurrent occlusion of the stents and in 8.3% due to infection. In the elastic stent group, six elastic stent fractures occurred after implantation. Four of them were spontaneously dislocated and two required additional transileal placement of additional elastic stents. In the metallic stent group, 40 delayed displacements of stents occurred after stenting. The rate of minor vascular complications was high and occurred in seven patients (3.8%) in the group of stent placement 6d1f23a050
